Arbitration, a form of alternative dispute resolution (ADR), is a way to resolve disputes outside the courts. The dispute will be decided by one or more persons (the 'arbitrators', 'arbiters' or 'arbitral tribunal'), which renders the 'arbitration award'. An arbitration award is legally binding on both sides and enforceable in the courts. Arbitration is often used for the resolution of commercial disputes, particularly in the context of international commercial transactions. In certain countries such Arbitrators in the United States are generally required to observe standards of impartiality and neutrality. Particular states may impose further requirements, such as California’s Ethics Standards for Neutral Arbitrators in Contractual Arbitrations. All major commercial arbitration institutions in the United States provide for confidentiality of an arbitration award, and often of the arbitration process itself. In an effort to provide some transparency, several organizations, including the AAA and the ICC, publish anonymized award summaries that do not disclose the parties’ identities or confidential commercial information. An arbitration award (or arbitral award) is a determination on the merits by an arbitration tribunal in an arbitration, and is analogous to a judgment in a court of law. It is referred to as an 'award' even where all of the claimant's claims fail (and thus no money needs to be paid by either party), or the award is of a non-monetary nature. Although arbitration awards are characteristically an award of damages against a party, tribunals usually have a range of remedies that can form a part of the award.
