COURSE OVERVIEW
This course surveys musicological approaches to the study of sexuality and gender, asking how music informs and reflects cultural constructions of femininity and masculinity. Taking wide-ranging examples that include opera, popular music, folk and indigenous musics, we will investigate how modern gendered subjectivities are negotiated through musical practices such as composition, performance and consumption. Class readings will include musicological, anthropological, feminist, Marxist and queer theory approaches. Students will practice writing skills in a variety of formal and informal formats, culminating in an in-class presentation based on original research.

MATERIALS
Most readings are available through the moodle2 site for this course. The following book is available for purchase at the Bard College Bookstore. All additional materials will be available through the Moodle2 site.

ASSIGNMENTS AND GRADING
1. Participation (25%)
   You will be expected to introduce a day’s topic at least once this semester. See below for comprehensive participation grading rubric. n.b. Assignments and readings are due on the day listed on the schedule.

2. Synthesis Papers (30%)
   Throughout the term, you will write three “synthesis papers,” 5-7 pages in length, that distill and review the arguments of three authors read in class. At the last class meeting, you will submit a portfolio of this written work to me for evaluation. In some cases, you will be asked to revise your papers.

3. Midterm Project (15%)
   We will experiment with modes of “storytelling” in digital environments. More information to come.
4. Final Project and Related Assignments (30%)

The final project will include a paper and in-class presentation. It can take a number of different forms tailored to your interests and abilities. A literature review describes and synthesizes the arguments and works of various authors (including, potentially, those read outside of class, in consultation with me). A book review focuses on one full monograph, and should be a sophisticated appraisal of that work’s scholarly contribution. An ambitious project could be an original ethnographic research paper consisting of fieldwork conducted during the course of the semester. (This option is not for the faint of heart, but, if you intend to continue your studies in ethnomusicology or related disciplines, this may be an excellent opportunity to begin work on a more long-term research project. If the ethnographic research paper is the avenue you choose, please talk to me soon.) You may also choose to develop a performance project that develops themes discussed in class. This should be documented (audio/visual) and also requires a paper that discusses the ideas that motivate the performance project.

Whatever form you choose, your final paper should be 10-15 pages (not including the reference list), double-spaced, twelve-point font, with one-inch margins.

There will be a series of small assignments leading up to the final project.

5. Extra Credit

You can turn in extra credit assignments at any time during the semester. These assignments can be: lecture reviews from events happening around campus, in-depth reviews of class readings, or thoughtful reflections on your participation in a world music ensemble. One catch: you must consult with me before you submit an extra credit assignment.

HOW TO READ & LISTEN
Just like writing, reading and listening are skills that must be practiced diligently to be improved. Allocate the necessary time and attention that it takes to read or listen. Make sure you find a comfortable place, free of distractions and interruptions, and focus on the task of reading.

PARTICIPATION
This class will benefit greatly from your thoughtful, sustained and enthusiastic participation. To be optimally prepared, readings and other assignments should be given sufficient time. “Participation” comprises 30% of your final grade and includes not only contributing your voice and perspective in class discussion, but also listening and responding to your peers to enhance class discussions. Please come to class prepared to pose at least one discussion question based on the week’s readings. The following is a rubric that outlines how participation will be graded:

A: You contribute to nearly every class meeting, raising interesting questions or problems that demonstrate your deep engagement with the readings and assignments. You are able to respond to the comments of others and contribute to the flow of discussion. Without your participation, our discussion would be substantially less productive.

B: You contribute sometimes, with comments that demonstrate good preparation. You are able to respond to the comments of others and contribute to the flow of discussion. Without your participation, our discussion would be less productive.

C: You contribute rarely, offering comments that demonstrate some preparation. You rarely respond to the comments of others and only occasionally contribute to the flow of discussion. Without your participation, our discussion would be about the same.

D: You contribute very rarely or not at all, making it difficult to evaluate your preparedness. Without your participation, our discussion would be unchanged.
Also D: You contribute to discussions but your comments demonstrate unsatisfactory preparation and do not enhance the flow of conversation. Without your participation, our discussion would be improved.

ATTENDANCE
You are expected to attend every class meeting. After two unexcused absences, I reserve the right to lower your grade. Come to class five minutes early; late arrivals will be counted as absences. In-class assignments cannot be made up. If you miss class, you are responsible for whatever we covered during our meeting.

IN-CLASS TECHNOLOGY PROTOCOLS
Please bring paper and a writing implement to every class. Cherish class meetings as a protected space: eighty minutes free from social media, web surfing, and online shoe shopping. I strongly prefer that you not use your laptop for any reason in the classroom. If you text, tweet, update your status, or do whatever else besides take notes in my classroom, you will be excused and counted as absent for that day.

ACADEMIC INTEGRITY
I take plagiarism very seriously. When in doubt, cite. If you paraphrase, always cite. If you are borrowing ideas, cite. We will cover some of the basics of how to cite in class. If specific questions about attribution of ideas or intellectual property arise, please bring your questions to me or raise them in class.

The purpose of this study was to examine stereotype of gender role in music video, comparing of gender image, sexuality (body exposure & sexual expression) by genre and gender difference. A content analysis of 300 songs and 517 characters was conducted between 2004 and 2013. Results were including followings. While women engaged in classic image, man engaged in naive image. R&B and Ballad demonstrated more classic image of women. Ballad, R&B, and Rock demonstrated more naive image of men than other genre. Sexuality was more prominent in dance and hip-hop genre. Compared to male char Sexuality is one of the most intensely pleasurable and yet troubling aspects of human experience. It is at the same time the most personal of realms and also the realm most carefully constrained by social order. It is the terrain where the imperatives of biological survival meet the treasured belief that we humans differ from animals by virtue of our ability to transcend demands of the body. Once upon a time, there was a young composer who received a commission to write orchestral music to accompany the dramatic narration of "Jack and the Beanstalk" for a children’s concert. Like most beloved fairy tales, "Jack" deals with very basic life issues: the beanstalk is accidentally planted when Jack's mother callously rejects his newly acquired magic beans.
